her husband was a staff officer who survived extraordinary service. He served in the American War of Independence. His grandson, George III, was a British officer, the Duke of Wellington's right-hand man in the battle of Waterloo. He was a most prominent figure, once one of the greatest military leaders of the time.

A week at Waddesdon is the story of a newly and Chief of Staff at Waddesdon. Unusually, he had at the Brunswick Military Academy; and in France, where he studied mathematics and French. During his time in France, he became a member of the club at the French Academy, and was deeply influenced by the work of Lavoisier and by the French Revolution. He returned to Scotland after the revolution, and eventually settled in Hamilton, where he opened a school. His students included William Hamilton, and later, James Macgregor.

This is also a story of strange coincidences. It was in Hamilton that he first met Lady Helen MacGregor, and later, married her. Lady Helen was a member of the MacGregor family, and was well known for her beauty and charm. The couple had three children, and were very happy together. However, their happiness was cut short when their youngest son was born with a deformed leg. Despite this, the family remained strong, and eventually, the son was able to live a normal life. The story of the MacGregors is a testament to the power of love and determination.
